Advance Praise for Ethics, Efficiency, and the Market

"Buchanan offers a welcome dose of common sense and careful reasoning . . . a cogent demolition of several strong positions that are often asserted."—Russell Hardin, The University of Chicago

"Ethics, Efficiency, and the Market contains the most thorough and systematic analysis of economic and moral arguments both for and against the market as an instrument of resource allocation. It is a remarkable work, written to be accessible to the undergraduate, but argued with sufficient depth, originality and rigor to demand the attention of the professional philosopher and the economist concerned with the philosophical implications and foundations of his discipline."—Jules Coleman, University of Arizona

Edited by Kenneth Kipnis and Diana T. Meyers

Twenty distinguished philosophers and social theorists have contributed original papers to this stimulating investigation into the nature of the economically just society. These remarkably coherent papers set out the problems of contemporary social theory within the context of the distributive justice vs. property rights debate initiated by the works of John Rawls and Robert Nozick. The result is a major advance in our understanding of how particular issues fit into the broad outlines of the more general debate. Of special interest are an introductory essay by Alan Gewirth and a major bibliographical essay by Carl Wellman.
