DEMOCRATIC GOVERNANCE: INCLUSIVE, ACCOUNTABLE, TRANSPARENT

U.S. foreign assistance deepens Burma's political and economic transition; strengthens human rights and rule of law; ensures that reform benefits all people; and supports the development of a stable society that reflects the diversity of the country.

After more than six decades of isolation, authoritarian rule, and civil conflict, Burma embarked on an ambitious path towards democratic governance and peace. While the peaceful and historic 2015 parliamentary election was an important step in Burma's long struggle for democracy, significant challenges remain. Decades without rule of law, free speech or democratic and political processes all pose unique challenges to the transition. USAID is promoting respect for the rule of law and human rights, building transparent and accountable governance systems, supporting independent media, and fostering a vibrant, tolerant civil society.

STRENGTHENING DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS & PROCESSES

USAID increases the capacity of democratic institutions to further consolidate democracy in Burma by working with key governance institutions including national, state, and regional Parliaments, the Union Election Commission (UEC), as well as political parties and civil society. These institutions receive training and technical assistance to improve legislative processes, build a competitive multi-party democracy and support by-elections, constitutional referenda, and the next general election in 2020. Civil society organizations play an important role in supplementing voter education efforts regarding the election and political processes, providing neutral oversight of election and polling events, and supporting citizen engagement with the Parliament and political parties.
